With their development of urban areas, humans not only overlaid their living patterns onto nature, but saw this phenomenon as an extension of nature. Suburban Form plays with this idea, suggesting a system of suburban constructions that mimic natural systems. Composed with acetate images of suburban construction, the installation is an environment in which the natural and man-made co-exist, creating a physical and emotional experience for the viewer.

About the Artist

Born in Taipei, Taiwan, Ming-Jer Kuo is a New York-based artist. Kuo worked as an environmental engineer for eleven years and came to New York to practice art.
