Christie Newman, a dance teacher, performing in a nontraditional space, a storefront gallery at 217 East 42nd Street in Midtown Manhattan that is run by Chashama, a nonprofit organization in New York that provides studio space for performing and visual artists. Ms. Newman performed her work, “Blue,” an investigation of a primary color, at the venue on July 13, 14 and 17. It was her first window performance.

Marilynn K. Yee, a photographer for The Times, is leading readers on a tour of New York’s public art, along with people’s reactions to it. The series will look at high-profile projects and accidental canvases, hidden in the hubbub.
